Huế, the land of HERITAGE
PEACE OF MIND? FIND US!
Hue has been depicted with many great words of praise. The Ancient Capital still retains a rare tranquillity amidst the fast-blooming tourism of the 21st century.

“There is no place that has the beauty of Hue” (Do Thi Thanh Binh)... What makes the people of Hue so proud of their homeland? Hue stands out as a well-preserved urban area, with the heritage of its imperial past and the cultural customs that have gracefully endured across the ages. Moreover, the temples, palaces, and mausoleums are elevated to perfection thanks to their deliberate arrangement inspired by rivers and mountains. Despite its past splendour, Hue modestly exudes a unique charm that remains true to the ancient quintessence of Vietnam, with a subtle rusticity that harmonises with nature.

Thus, Hue is a social platform in which each “signing-in” is an invitation into serenity and mindfulness. Visitors come to Hue to recover from their post-holiday fatigue and truly immerse in its unique beauty, one that has become iconic of the Central Coastland.

Truong Quy

“My mother says that Hue is the land of profound depth, where people value the harmony between body and soul, self, humanity, and nature. Hue people are bound by humility, at times appearing timid like a “closed gate in the Forbidden City”

Miss Tourism Hue 2015, Le Tran Ngoc Tran invites travellers to find the “harmonies” in this peaceful land.
Once the marriage offering of King Che Man (Kingdom of Champa) for Princess Huyen Tran of the Tran Dynasty in 1306, Thua Thien Hue became part of Dai Viet that same year. Among the five feudal dynasties it witnessed (Tran, Le, Nguyen Lords, Tay Son, and lastly, Nguyen), Hue served as the imperial capital-headquarter of three. The golden history of over 700 years has made Hue a destination with five UNESCO world cultural heritage sites.

THE COMPLEX OF HUE MONUMENTS
World Heritage Site (1993)
Laying by the dreamy Perfume River, the Complex of Hue Monuments comprises numerous historical-cultural relics built during the Nguyen dynasty (5.2km²: Imperial Citadel, palaces, mausoleums, temples, and pagodas). This site is a prime example of the harmony between urban beauty and natural landscapes.

HUE ROYAL COURT MUSIC
Royal court music (Nha nhac) was institutionalised in the 15th century and skillfully refined in the Nguyen dynasty. Distinct from folk music, this is the official form of music in court ceremonies and festivals. It was considered a means of communication and expressing respect to deities and kings. The Nguyen reign held nearly 100 performances annually.

LITERATURE ON HUE ROYAL ARCHITECTURE
World Documentary Heritage in the Asia-Pacific Region (2016)
Verses of the kings, princes, and officials on wooden bas-reliefs, architectural structures, or porcelain created a one-of-a-kind calligraphy and art collection. It mirrored a flourishing period of Confucian literature in Vietnam under the reigns of kings such as Minh Mang, Thieu Tri and Tu Duc.

Two World Documentary Heritages: Nguyen dynasty’s Chau ban (royal court's administrative document system) and Moc ban (woodblocks carved with reversed Han-Nom script for book printing), provide reliable sources for research, collation and study of various fields in Vietnam.

Visitors can explore some of those national documents in Tang Thu Lau (Royal Library at 346 Dinh Tien Hoang Rd., Hue City).
In its prime, the 36-hectare Imperial City had approximately a hundred constructions of various sizes, strictly arranged according to feng shui principles and specific functional purposes.

- The grand ceremonial areas: constructions stretched along the central axis, from the Meridian Gate to Thai Hoa Palace.
- The worshipping spaces: symmetrically arranged temples on both sides at the front of Thai Hoa Palace.
- The residence and workspace of the king and his royal family: the Purple Forbidden City.
- The residence of the king’s grandmother (Truong Sanh Palace) and of the king’s mother (Dien Tho Palace): was placed following the “man on the left, woman on the right” principle.
- The Noi Vu (Home Affairs) Office: where royal artefacts and supplies were crafted, managed, and stored.
- Gardens and the princes’ study places: Thieu Phuong Garden, Co Ha Garden, Tu Phuong Vo Su Pavilion.

Dien Tho Palace (1804)

Filial piety towards mother, accord with brother.

This is the most advanced remaining palace of royal architecture in Hue. Dien Tho Palace, where the king’s mother lived, is one of the three earliest-built constructions within the Imperial City. The complex displays various styles and types of architecture, including palaces, contemplative pavilions, and temples. The phoenix’s image, representing femininity, prevails among the decorative motifs.

The Mieu (1821)

The royal “genealogy book”

The To Mieu is the grandest of five ancestral temples in the Imperial City. It reveres 10 of the 13 kings of the Nguyen dynasty, meritorious officials, and land spirits. Most prominent within the temple’s area, Hien Lam Cac (15m high) is the tallest structure in the Imperial City of Hue and a place to praise the achievements of the Nguyen kings and officials. The National Treasure of Cuu Dinh is a nine-piece set of copper cauldrons with bas-reliefs cast in 1836, depicting a panoramic view of the mountains, rivers, and territorial waters of Dai Nam (Vietnam’s official name from King Minh Mang’s reign until the end of the Nguyen dynasty).

Thai Hoa Palace (1805)

The Palace of Supreme Harmony

The Great Court Ritual (on the 1st and 15th of each lunar month) and other significant court ceremonies were organised in this palace. Thai Hoa Palace stands as the most important building for both symbolic meaning and functional purposes. Its wooden structure was designed with double-layered roofs and walls, with a system of crab-shell-shaped arched ceilings connecting the front hall (only the royal family and top 4 officials were allowed to enter) to the main hall (where the king’s throne is placed). Nine colourful porcelain-inlaid dragons on the royal yellow glazed tiles represent the revered and precious throne.

Although the palace is being restored, visitors can admire the Great Royal Courtyard. Two lines of steles indicate the rank of mandarins, helping them arrange themselves in order.
NGO MON (1833)

Meridian gate

"Ngo Mon", the gate facing the South, is the Imperial City’s main gate. It comprises 5 entrances, with the centre one reserved exclusively for the kings. The nearly five-metre-high Meridian Gate is one of the greatest remaining gates in Vietnam. It witnessed important events in Vietnamese history, such as the ceremony of abdication and handing over of King Bao Dai’s sword and seal to the government of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam in 1945.

THIEU PHUONG GARDEN (1828)

The unity of nature and human beings

The architecture of this garden, once amongst the most picturesque spots of the capital, embodies the core concept of the Nguyen dynasty’s royal gardens: highlighting subtle beauty with lakes and ponds being a central element of the landscape, providing a rustic serenity that allows the kings to reconnect with nature after court affairs. Thieu Phuong Garden and Co Ha Garden are two representative royal gardens restored in the Imperial City.

The corridors of the Imperial City create a fluid transition between constructions. For a notable example, the “Van Tu Hoi Lang” structure in Thieu Phuong garden features a square-turned corridor in the shape of the \( \卐 \) character. Enjoying tea in Thieu Phuong Garden is highly recommended.

Nguyen kings, firm believers in the afterlife, meticulously chose land for their eternal repose. These royal constructions were the king’s graves, places of worship, and workspaces. This “eternal home”, embraced by verdant nature, was of splendour instead of sorrow.

KHIEM LANG (1864)
The tomb of King Tu Duc
Aside from being the final resting place, Khiem Lang was a frequent retreat of King Tu Duc (1829-1883) during his reign. With approximately 50 constructions of palaces, temples, theatres, and pavilions, this graceful and dreamy mausoleum reflects the romantic yet sensitive soul of the fourth king of the Nguyen dynasty.

UNG LANG (1920)
The tomb of King Khai Dinh
Ung Lang outstands as a daring fusion of architectural styles, such as Hue’s imperial palaces, French castles, Roman columns, Indian temples, and decorative motifs from Confucianism, Taoism, Buddhism, and Vietnamese folk art. This harmonious integration turned this mausoleum into a distinctive East-West “fine art museum”.

Once considered an extravagant construction, Ung Lang’s interior exhibits the pinnacle of artistry in porcelain inlay decoration. Through the talent of Vietnamese artisans, its mural arts showcase the vibration of traditional topics, such as the four sacred animals (dragon, unicorn, tortoise, and phoenix) and the four seasons’ flowers (pine, chrysanthemum, bamboo, and plum blossoms). In the courtyard, a man-size bronze statue of King Khai Dinh, which was cast in France in 1922, is a perfect centrepiece for this marvellous historical site.

“Cuu long an van” (nine hidden dragons in the clouds), created by the excellent painter Phan Van Tanh, is an exquisite mural, leaving a profound visual impact.
Pilgrimage destinations in the SACRED LAND

Hue has been at the “crossroads” of cultural exchanges for centuries, from Champa to Dai Viet, passing through Chinese, Indian, and later on, Western civilizations. The coexistence of their religions and beliefs created a harmonious space founded on shared virtues and a belief in good deeds.

THE ZEN LAND

While Confucianism held sway in the kingdom’s governance, Buddhism gained favour from the Nguyen kings and lords as a means to appease their subjects. Hue thus becomes the Zen capital of the kingdom with over 300 pagodas and Buddha recitation halls. Here, where Buddhists make up the majority, visiting pagodas as a traditional practice is customary.

Tu Dam, Dieu De, Bao Quoc, Ba La Mat, Thanh Duyen... are other prominent sacred temples. In this Zen land, life is marked by the seasons of Vesak (the celebration of Buddha’s birth) and Vu Lan (with filial piety rituals to parents). Visitors to Hue on these occasions can engage in spiritual practices such as praying, fasting, and meditating at Buddhist venues or join the Buddha procession from Dieu De Pagoda to Tu Dam Pagoda.

- Vesak: from 8th to 15th of April (lunar calendar)
- Vu Lan festival: 15th of July (lunar calendar)

Thien Mu Pagoda (17th century)

The Ancient Capital’s symbol

Phuoc Duyen Tower (1844): the tallest building in the west of Hue Citadel, 21m high, octagonal shape, 7 stories.
- Nguyen Phuc Nguyen Rd., Hue City
- From 6am daily

Tu Hieu Pagoda (19th century)

The pagoda of eunuchs

Tu Hieu Pagoda attracts Buddhists and tourists with its poetic scenery and serene ambiance. A corner in the pagoda garden is the resting place of some eunuchs of the Nguyen dynasty.
- Le Ngo Cat Rd., Hue City
- From 6am daily

THE HOLY REALM OF MOTHER GODDESSES

The folk beliefs of the Four Palaces (including the worship of Heaven, Earth, Mountains, and Water) originated from the North Vietnamese Mother Goddess worship combined with the cult of Thien Y A Na (the goddess Po Nagar of Champa). Hue Nam Temple, also known as Hon Chen Temple, has long been revered as a holy pilgrimage destination in Hue.
- Huong Tho Commune, Hue City

Hon Chen Temple festivals:
- Spring festival: 2nd and 3rd of March (lunar calendar)
- Autumn festival: July (lunar calendar)
UNDER THE WISHING TREES
The beautiful trees of Hue take on roles beyond landscape or shelter from the scorching heat of central Vietnam. The “ngo dong” tree (Firmiana simplex), revered for its association with good luck and longevity, is often found in royal palaces and mausoleums. The pine tree, representing self-discipline and resilience, resides in Ngu Binh Mountain (the Citadel’s Royal Screen) and the Nam Giao Esplanade (1806).

Vong Canh Belvedere Hilltop (Thuy Bieu Ward, Hue City) is also an idyllic stop, offering picturesque sunset on the romantic bend of the Perfume River.

VERDANT VILLAGES
With its enchanting and vibrant villages tucked inside the green landscapes, Hue offers a sanctuary for meditation and contemplation. Bamboo and Siamese acalypha tea fences, brick gates leading to the main house, feng shui screens, ornamental ponds, and miniature landscape art in the front yard are typical features of garden houses in Hue.

Thanh Thuy Chanh (Huong Thuy Town)
Nestled beside the ancient Thanh Toan Tile Bridge, the vivid night market comes alive every weekend, offering traditional specialties such as Bai Choi, folk games, conical-hat-making performances.

Phu Loc District (40 km from Hue City)
The ancient pottery village was established in 1470, with 26 garden houses dating back centuries.

BACH MA NATIONAL PARK
Approximately 50 kilometres south of Hue City lies Bach Ma National Park, a haven for those yearning for tranquillity amidst abundant greenery. March to October is the ideal period for witnessing the captivating langurs and birds. Activities in Bach Ma National Park:

- Tri Sao and Truoi Lake: two challenging paths for adventurous trekkers.
- Cycling to conquer Bach Ma peak.
- Camping overnight (tents are available for rent on-site, or bring your own gear).
- Sunrise tour & Bird-watching tour: You can by chance witness ranger Truong Cam - a mutant who can “speak” the languages of nearly 200 species of birds, talking to the twittering birds.
